

Shona Calzada Ganguly maneuvers through the terrain of environmental policy in southern California. She works for The Nature Conservancy in California as the Associate Director of Southern California External Affairs, managing relationships with local, state, and federal legislators, officials, partner organizations, and supporting conservation programs in the region. Shona is a graduate of University of California, Berkeley (BA in Development Studies and South Asian Studies), Claremont Graduate University (MA in Cultural Studies), and the Peter Drucker and Masatoshi Ito School of Management (MBA). She has provided support to her family's business, Pia Ka Ghar (www.piakaghar.com), in Indian designer clothing accessories since 2003, primarily because of the vision of inclusive growth in Bengal, women's empowerment, and international development. She is an avid international traveler, dog lover, language learner (Bengali, Italian, Spanish, and French), foodie/cooking junkie, addicted to yoga, leisurely hiker, and has been dancing (mostly ballet) since she was 4 years old. She currently lives in Shadow Hills (a neighborhood of Los Angeles) with her son, husband, and two Husky-Malamute-Shepherds.