

Identifying Writerly Rituals

THRIVE + Center for Writing and Rhetoric
“Finding Your Writer Voice”

Identifying your writer-voice includes the ritualistic component of writing. Not just your physical writing process, this includes your process of sitting into your position of a writer and being able to reflect your voice as best as possible. Try to fill in the boxes as best you can, and feel free to note other writing rituals. Feel free to include links or anything to keep your ritual aids in one place.

What time do you start to write?

Do you like to write in your home or outside?

Describe your workspace:

Do you have coffee, tea, or snack rituals?

Describe your playlist:

What do you need before you start writing? Do you need to remove distractions? Clean?

Do you meditate before you write?

How do you prepare to start writing? To-do lists, reviewing past work...?

What type of breaks do you take?

How do you put your work away for the day?